REV. LEWIS PAYS TRIBUTE TO LABOR

Preaches Practical Sermon Appropriate to Labor Day Declaring That Church is For the Worker.

A practical sermon, especially appropriate to Labor Day, was preached yesterday morning at the Carlight Methodist church by Rev. P. P. Lewis. The scripture lesson was read from the 10th chapter of Mark, and the text was chosen from the verse, "Whosoever shall be chief amongst you, shall be servant of all." And the topic was announced as being "Message of the church in reference to labor."

An explanation was given of the way in which Labor Day was established, when a law was passed by Congress making it a national holiday. This law was introduced, it was said, by a member of the house from South Dakota, who was an ex-preacher. The thought was brought out that it was not a law to the church, that this law was introduced not by a labor agitator, but by a preacher of the gospel. And that the need for it was recognized not by an industrial state, but by an agricultural commonwealth.

"The church is sometimes made," said Rev. Lewis, "that the church is made up of men, but one who has read the history of the church knows that such is not the case. It has emphasized the need of toil, and has always given honor to those who labored cheerfully and well."

Preeminence was given to the fact that the founder of the Christian religion was born in a laboring man's home, and reared among humble surroundings in the family of a village carpenter. It was said that houses built even he found in Nazareth to this day, which contained the handiwork of Jesus. "One could picture him in the mind's eye," said the speaker, "going down the dusty village streets, bearing the tools of his trade. He was probably the oldest son, the support of the little family, as it is supposed that Joseph died early."

"This account of the origin of Jesus seems to dispose of the idea advanced by some philosophers, that the account of his life as given in the scriptures, is a fabrication. The Jews pictured him as a prince coming in glory to claim his crown, and it was out of keeping with the age in which he lived for him to come as a toiler. Labor was degraded by the Romans, who looked down on one who worked for a living. Jesus had to combat that feeling among his followers. This is what he says—'He that is greatest among you shall be your servant.'"

"The lesson brought out with great forcefulness by the sermon was that 'war is teaching the world, that every one must be useful and do something worth while, and that the idle rich as a class have almost disappeared.'"

Another thought brought out was that there are no distinctions between those who work with their brains, or their hands, and that bitter class prejudices should be eliminated. He deplored the oft times silly and brainless policy of many of the labor unions in the past, and their purposeless and unreasonable demands. But they were now directed, it was said by men of intelligence and with those of a vision and an outlook for a future, instead of by social agitators.

"The statement was made that if Germany had not precipitated the war, at this time, that the social revolutionists of that country would have disposed of the government inside of ten years."

"The burdens which are still around the necks of the people who toil were contemplated as being, 'the irresponsible socialist class with their ideas of a social revolutionary program, like that of the W. W.'"

"The criminal class which is a constant drag, around the neck of honest toil, and the class of the idle rich with their immense profits made from the coal, iron and oil resources of the country which should belong to the nation."

"The standpoint of the church was outlined as being not in taking sides one class against another, but in helping all toward the better way. 'Men are brothers, and should share with each other,' was a strong statement made."

"Anyone supplying the needs of the world," it was declared, "was a toiler, whether he were teaching the boys and girls, caring for the sick or working in the fields."

"This attitude of men toward each other and their life work, is the supreme test of life," it was affirmed. "The speaker closed with a statement that 'the blessing of earth is toil, and that the Son of God, came down from heaven, to labor for the benefit of mankind, and to recognize the dignity of the common task, that helps to make the world better, and in that way, grows divine.'"

"The music was appropriate and well rendered by a chorus choir of a dozen voices under the direction of Miss Sewell. The opening anthem was, 'O Sing Unto the Lord,' and Mrs. Sewell sang, 'No Other Friend Like Jesus.'"

There was a conspicuous lack of automobiles in front of all the churches of the city, their absence being made up by the comfortable family carriages and buggies of other days. Many of those were in evidence, and the few if any autos were out on professional business, called for their families at the close of the services, but for the most part people walked, and from the churches, except for the assistance of street cars, and the horse drawn vehicles for out of town attendants.

SLACKERS BEWARE OF EVADING THE DRAFT

Announcement was made on Sunday by the war department that a great organization, extending into every state, and with agents in other countries, has been constructed to hunt down those who attempt to evade the provisions of the new selective service law. Complete instructions will be in the hands of the organization in every state by Sept. 12, when all men between the ages of 18 and 45 must register.

"Already, with the various and innumerable factors now at the disposal of the government," the protest march general announced on Sunday, "the ways of the slacker under the original draft law have become increasingly hard. It is estimated that between 20,000 and 25,000 have been rounded up since June 5, 1917. The names of others not yet apprehended, because of absence from the country, are in possession of the government, and prosecution faces any one of them, who, having fled the country to escape the draft, attempts to return."

Under the terms of the law police officials in all the states, counties and cities throughout the country are required to co-operate with the department of justice in enforcing the provisions of the act.

Besides these agencies, however, are scores upon scores of private organizations, national or local in scope, that have been set up by patriotic citizens to ferret out the men who would shirk the call of their country."

Among the larger of these are the American Protective league and the secret service branch of the council of national defense. And there is hardly a community where there are not local organizations, many of them secret in character, that are constantly on the alert for information that will aid the government in rounding up slackers."

Life Made Miserable. "For the man who has failed to register and for the man who has ignored the orders of local boards, life is becoming increasingly miserable. The department of justice who deal in Mexico before June 5, 1917, to escape registration. Against each one of them a complete case has been prepared so that immediate prosecution can be under taken the moment the man attempts to cross the border, whether the attempt is made during the war, or afterward."

"Just as the government has the names of those who fled to Canada to escape registration. With the going into effect of the British-American reciprocal draft treaty, these men must either face conscription into the Canadian army or return to the United States to face imprisonment and ultimate induction into the service."

"Slacker raid launched in various states from time to time by federal agencies have been most effective in rounding up not only those who have failed to register under the old law, but those who, having registered, failed to return questionnaires or obey other orders of the boards."

The bond issue is imperative.

TRAINING AT CAMP AS MACHINE GUNNER

Private Dee J. McDaniels Writes From Camp Hancock Of Machine Gun Training.

Although in service a little more than a month, Pri. Dee J. McDaniels, Janesville soldier who left with a commission in the artillery, according to word from Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Ky., where he has been in training.

The officers' training camp at Camp Taylor is for artillery officers alone, and provision has been made to commission 1,000 officers every week to supply the growing demand for artillery experts. Lieutenant Whitford was one of a large number awarded commissions last week at the camp.

The big question is the bond issue.

On sale at St. Joseph's Convent, identification cards and pocket folders for soldiers and sailors. Also numerous religious articles.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENT

It is just a month today since we left. We were transferred Friday morning, 25th of us. We are in the very last end of the company street with a great big shade tree right in front of our tent, the only one on the street, and I don't believe there's a nicer tree in the whole camp. Makes our tent nice and cool.

Our company is composed of men from eight or nine companies, just picked men, all with a fair or good education and an American born. No foreigners in with us like in our own companies. It is supposed to be a sort of machine gun school. We got our rifles yesterday. Suppose we will start training with them tomorrow. Ed. Birmingham from Janesville is in my tent; his cot is beside mine. Bill Minnick from Janesville and a fellow from Edgerton, who came with us are in this company also. Twenty-eight from the 7th company transferred with us. The bunch in our tent are all pretty fair fellows—seven from Wisconsin and one from New York. He is part Jew, but there is not a better hearted fellow in the whole company.

Henry McDaniels is in our company, too. I expect we will have to drill all day and go to school for one and one-half or two hours at night. We won't have much spare time excepting on Saturday and Sunday. We ate about three miles from the street car line, and it takes a half hour to get down town.

FURTHER LATITUDE IN FLOUR BUYING

Mixed Flour Containing More Than 20 Per Cent of Substitutes Now Sold Independently.

County Food Administrator, F. J. Clemens, received notification this morning from the Federal Food Administration for Wisconsin that all stocks of mixed flour containing 20 per cent or more of substitutes, now in the hands of Janesville dealers, may until exhausted, be sold without substitutes.

This modification of the previous regulations governing flour of this character is an important one to the consumer, as flour of this type formerly necessitated a purchase of 40 per cent of substitutes. In the case of all flour containing less than 20 per cent of substitutes one full pound of substitutes must be purchased with each sale of flour.

New rules governing the manufacture of mixed flour are effective September 1, and the above regulations apply solely to stocks now in the hands of Janesville dealers.

WORLD'S SERIES TO SEE
BATTLE BETWEEN TWO
IRON-JAWED MANAGERS

(JANESVILLE SPECIAL) [R]
 New York, Sept. 2.—Two powerful managers are going to match brains in the coming world series. On one side will be Frederick Yapp, known to baseball as Fred Mitchell, on the other will be Ed Barrow.

There are two managers of the iron-jawed variety. Both have climbed to the top in baseball society because of the stuff that is in them. Neither knows the meaning of the word "obscure" and the word "can't" doesn't figure in their vocabularies.

Mitchell served his time as a pitcher and catcher in both the major and minor leagues. He was never a pitcher for catcher, although he was a mighty good player in his time. He won his way to fame as a manager. He won his way to fame as a manager.

Ed Barrow, like Mitchell, has nothing much to brag about in the line of his accomplishments on the diamond. He was successful as a player, but as a manager, however, and when he came into the political end of the game he immediately made a name for himself. As president of the International League he grew into the position of one of the biggest men in baseball outside the majors. Now, as manager of the Red Sox he has made good once again. Just as it was predicted he would.

It is going to be an iron-jawed, powerful argument, this coming world's series. If the managers are allowed to carry out their policies on the field of play.

WORLD SERIES WILL ATTRACT BIG CROWDS
 NEW YORK, September 2.—While neither side expects nor anticipates a big crowd, it is expected that the coming World Series will attract big crowds.

ZEIDER GETS FIRST CHANCE IN SERIES

Rollie Zeider.

Rollie Zeider is one of the veterans of baseball who has given the game his best for years in the hope of helping his team win the pennant. And each season until the present one his work has been in vain. Now Zeider is to see his hopes realized. He has been playing good ball for the Cubs and deserves some of the credit for their showing.

baseball fans throughout the country are certain to watch the daily returns with more than the usual interest owing to the changed conditions under which the series will be played. Two outstanding features are apparent which have not here to be faced by either the players or the magnates at any time in the history of the baseball classic.

No such national or international crisis has ever prevailed during the playing of a World Series as exists at this time. Under normal conditions the annual clash of the pennant winning clubs of the rival major leagues has each season been one of the events of the year. The play was followed each day by hundreds of thousands of baseball enthusiasts in all parts of the country. Great cities and little hamlets in isolated sections of the continent have witnessed the daily gathering of throngs before the bullpen and player boards to follow the fortunes of the competing teams.

Today the mind of the public is burdened with great responsibilities and cares and the World Series at best can be but a monetary diversion. Under the circumstances it appears certain that while the games may be well attended, there will be nothing like the great outpouring of fans which have each year filled the parks to capacity and swelled the coffers of the clubs and players.

Strange to say this will make little difference to the men who will participate in the diamond battles for under the new system of apportioning the winners' and losers' individual share of the receipts they can secure but a fixed sum, regardless of the total of the gate receipts.

Sport Snap Shots

MORRIS MILLER

"Whom do you pick to win the world's series?" a host of fans have asked me.

The Cubs.
 For two reasons.
 First, because the dope points that way. The dope goes wrong as often as it steers you straight, but it forms the only tangible base on which to work.

Second, a hunch tells me. And next to a hunch is the next best bet in picking a winner.

The latest statistics show that the Cubs have the edge on the Red Sox in:

Batting.
 Extra base hits.
 Base running.
 Run-getting.
 Fielding.

Of course the difference in batting may be due to the difference in the quality of pitching handed out by the hurlers of the two leagues.

But this difference hardly could account for the fact that the Cubs ranked second in their league in batting while the Red Sox rank seventh.

One solid smash is liable to bust up any game and we've seen an extra-base hit put several world's series on ice.

The Cubs have six men who can enter the extra-base hit column at any time. The Red Sox boast of only one real hard hitter. He is Babe Ruth.

And right here let me point out another fact.
 Babe Ruth has found it harder to get out home runs and ever-triples and doubles in his own back yard than in any field in the circuit. This may or may not indicate anything, but at the same time it may mean that even Babe will not be able to keep up his slugging average in any of the world's series games staged in Boston. How he will fare at the Cubs' park remains to be seen, of course.

If the first three games of the series are staged at Chicago, as announced by resident Ben Johnson, the Cubs will have an important advantage.

The real test of the Red Sox team as a championship aggregation will come when it faces the Cub crowd in a strange baseball park, with the world pennant and a good bunch of coin at stake. The team must be a money-making organization which can face this situation and get away with it.

Recently the Red Sox club, while playing good ball, has seemed to its followers to have lost a lot of the punch which started it on its road to pennantville. Whether or not it can shake off this condition, the grand show opens remains to be seen.

Mitchell has two other good pitchers back up Tyler and Vaughn. Hendryx and Phil Douglas have been doing good work. Hendryx not only has been effective on the box, but is a timely hitter. Hendryx or Tyler steer the team into diamond battles for under the new system of apportioning the winners' and losers' individual share of the receipts they can secure but a fixed

The Daily Novelette

A FILM STORY

"Good morning, Mr. Manager. You are the manager, are you not? You are not? Very well, good day." and the great inventor who had just been addressing the "props" hatched him. "Good morning, Mr. Manager," began the great inventor. This time he wasn't mistaken for MANAGER was written all over the door.

"I have an invention of wonderful propensities," he began.

"We don't need inventions here—we need bouncers!" growled the great theatrical manager.

"Bouncers? That's wonderful. Why my first invention was a bouncer! How did you know? But what I have here is a million times more wonderful. You know how very annoying it is when people come into the movies and only see the end of the film—"

"Yes, yes, hurry up!"

"And see half of it and then know how it ends before they see how it begins. It's very aggravating and makes them mad. Well,

I have in my bag a device. No matter when your patrons arrive, they see the film right from the start—this patent makes—"

"Let me see it!" cried the theatrical manager, eagerly stretching out his two hands.

"Not so fast. I've just proved its beneficial qualities to you, but first I want a small retainer—a fee of $500 to let you see it."

"Absurd!—$500 for a pig in a bag? Preposterous!" raved the manager.

"$500 to see the device and $10,000 to use it—otherwise, it shall remain obscure in my bag!" smiled the great inventor, complacently.

"I won't do it!" stormed the theatrical manager.

"Very well—then you can't see it!" returned the great inventor.

(The end of it.)

B. J. SPRINGER FOR SHERIFF

TOMORROW

He was born and raised in Rock County.

He was backed by the citizens of Edgerton by all but 20 votes in the 1916 Primary, which is a splendid endorsement from the people who know him best, having been their officer thirteen years, eight years of which he was Chief of Police.

He is an able and fearless officer whom we can go the limit in recommending to the public.

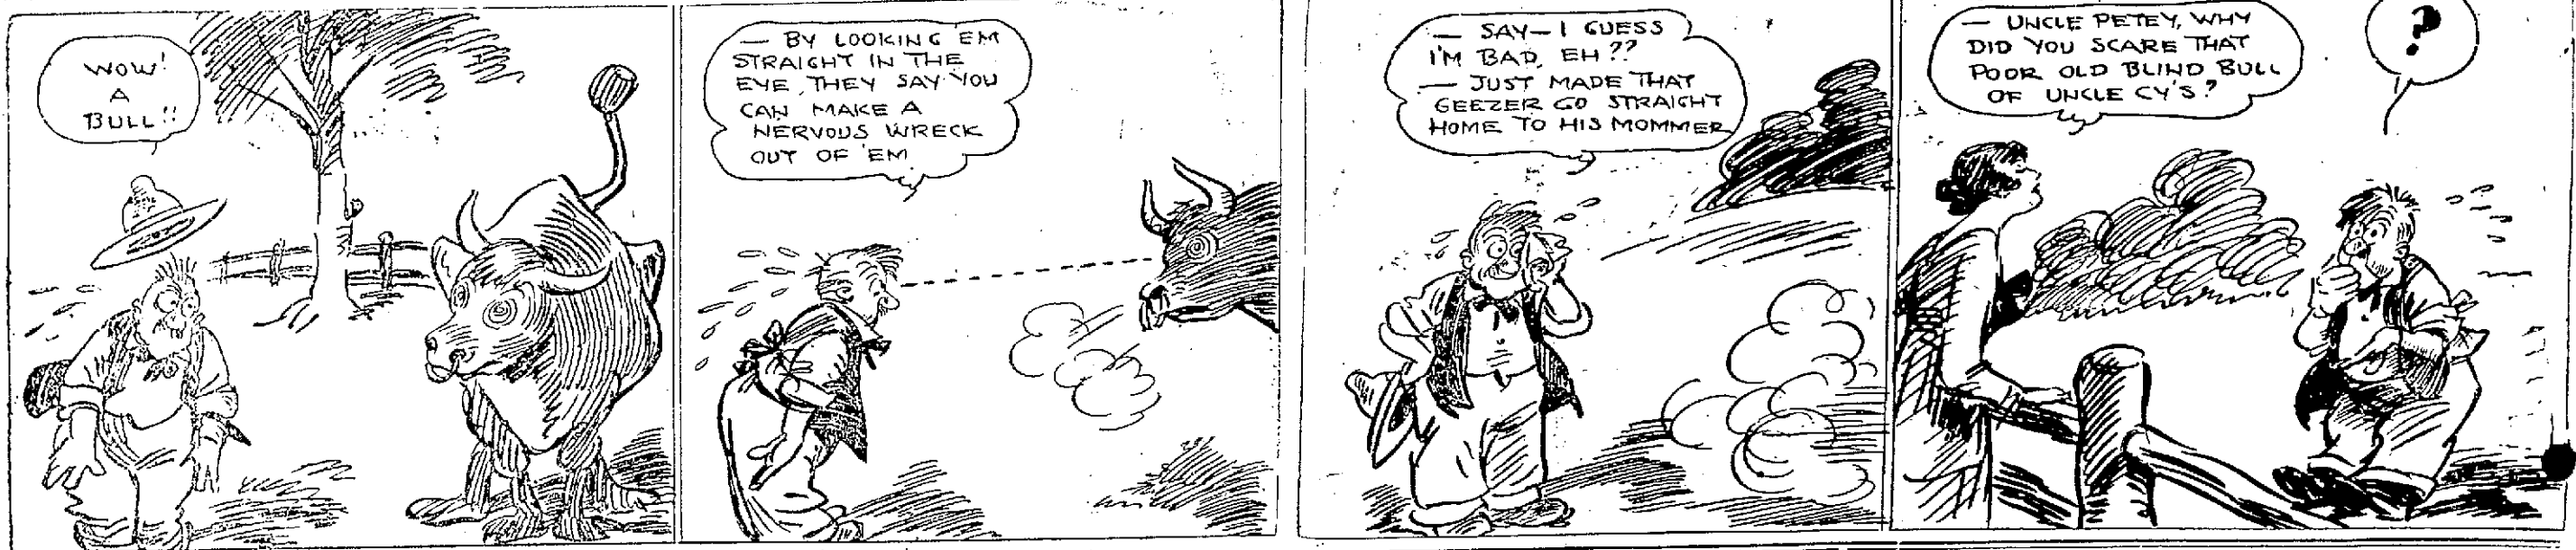

Vote for the man who has all the qualifications of an efficient sheriff, one who will back not only Janesville's interest, but the interest of the entire county as well.

This advertisement is cheerfully and willingly donated by the citizens of Edgerton without any solicitation on the part of Mr. Springer, because we want the voters of the county to know the facts.

Mall was now becoming desperate. It did not seem at all so easy as he had expected. If only Floide hadn't got her back up so foolishly! Well, he must, at least, be off with his old love before he was on with the new. And, for that, he must have the answers of the two women. He left the company and walked into the studio, now deserted, to look at the clock. Heavens! It was already half after eleven. Something would have to happen in a hurry, if—

Carolyn Dallys appeared in the doorway, smiling. She was wearing a corset, in a costume no man could have described five minutes after he had seen it. Carolyn's clothes were always not only original but characteristic of her.

She sauntered in, and dropped upon the couch, to look up at him good-naturedly. Hall's hopes rose. It was not to be easy, thank heaven. She didn't at all have the smile of a prospective owner.

"Well, Hall," she began, "you don't seem particularly anxious to see your blushing bride. I had almost begun to think you were deliberately avoiding me."

"Avoiding you? Nonsense, Carolyn!" Hall laughed easily and tossed her a box of cigarettes. "Really, I've been so comfortably busy with all these people, and—"

She broke in quickly: "Well, you're not busy now, are you?"

Hall began to be afraid. "Oh, no, of course not. Why?" He watched her as if she were about to strike him.

"Well, then, I've made up my mind, Hall."

"What do you mean?" he asked, and assuming a carelessness he was far from feeling. He walked to the table and took up a flower, idly.

"Why, I told you over the telephone, didn't I? Look pleasant, Hall," she said; "it's yes. I've decided to accept you."

Hall grew faint. It was not alone the words that alarmed him. It was the cold-blooded tone in which they were uttered. There was a deliberateness, a fixity of purpose in it that threatened his complacency. Carolyn still maintained her usual jocular manner, but there was something keen and steady beneath it that he had never before felt. He rose to meet it with all his skill at acting.

"Lord, Carolyn," he exclaimed, walking up to her impatiently, "you didn't really take me seriously, this morning, did you?" He burst out into forced laughter. "Well, that is funny; think of you—of all women—getting caught like that! It's perfectly absurd! You can't make me believe you thought I was in earnest, you know! That's absurd!"

So the agile trout, when he first feels the hook in his mouth, thinks that by a bold struggle he can regain his freedom, and thrashes the pool with hectic energy. But Carolyn, with all her humor, was a shrewd cool fisher of men. Calmly, surely, she kept her line taut. She had struck four millions! Not for a moment had she lost her composure. Slowly she spoke; she almost drawled.

"Why, yes, I did, Hall! Surely, you seemed to have a lucid interval, you know, this morning, and I believed every word you said. And what's more," she added, "I believe it now!" Lazily, to and fro, her feather fan was sweeping.

Hall floundered again, wildly. "Oh, come on, Carolyn! Can't you take a joke?"

"Yes," she answered smilingly, "when I see the point of it. Will you kindly explain?"

The point, Hall well knew, was in his own mouth. He dashed up and down the room fretfully, making fervent gestures. Poor fish! He still imagined he could get away from the hook. "Good heavens, I have explained, haven't I? Why, I only wanted to hear what you'd say!"

"Well, you've heard, I say 'yes!' Now what?" She took a cigarette from the table and gracefully lighted it, puffed out the smoke, and yawned.

As she drew in her line thus, his frenzied struggles were getting shorter, but more violent. "Oh, hang it all, Carolyn, you know I was only fooling, of course! Why, we were laughing all the time, you know that! I had no idea you'd ever accept me! Do you mean to tell me that you are in love with me?" he asked bittily.

"Not at all! I see no need of lying about it, whatever. But you certainly do amuse me." Her eyes danced. "Well, I should say it was hardly enough to amuse you!" This was the best Hall could do, now; he was getting winded.

"Oh, yes," she replied jauntily, "on the contrary, I'm quite sure that I shall want to be amused all my life—especially when I'm married."

"Well, Why Don't You Kiss Me, Hall?"

"Heavens! Do you consider that we are engaged?"

She looked at him with surprised eyes. Her fishing was approaching a climax. She began to wind in her line to short length, speaking incisively. "See here, Hall, you're not trying to get out of it, or anything, are you?"

Hall gasped, worried with the duel. "Now, Carolyn, let me explain just how it is—I'll have to tell you something—I want to—hang it—you make it so damned hard for me—what I mean is—"

Carolyn rose and looked him in the eye. She laid her hand on him; and, soft as its touch, he felt as if it were gripping him like a handcliff. "Hall, see here! Are you trying to get out of it, or aren't you? Just tell me that!"

"Why—why, I think you're carrying the joke a little too far, Carolyn, that's all—honestly I do!"

Carolyn now had him at the edge of the boat. She jerked him in with a laugh. "My dear old Hall," she said, and her voice was honey-sweet, "I'm carrying it only far enough to want to wear that ring you bought today for me. Where is it?" She actually began to feel in his waistcoat pocket.

He backed off in terror. "I haven't any ring!"

Carolyn smiled. "Well, never mind. We don't want anyone to know just yet, anyway, do we? Rings can wait. Now come over here and sit down, and I'll tell you exactly what we're going to do."

She proceeded to lead him, too dazed to resist, toward the couch where they sat down together.

"Now be brave," she said, smiling. "I'll let you hold my hand. You do just what I say, and you'll never regret it. I hate engagements; they have neither the excitement of courtship, nor the satisfaction of matrimony. So, at just nine o'clock tomorrow morning, you are going to call on me and we'll toddle down to a justice of the peace. We'll just cut out the white veil and downcast eyes and everything. All you'll have to do is to put a gold band on my finger; and my share will be to say 'I will' and become Mrs. Hall Bonistelle. What's the matter?"

Hall was staring toward the door.

"Yes, that's right!" said Jonas, with unction. "I certainly have, miss. Why, I've buried three wives already! I reckon I know pretty near as much about women as anybody."

"My cousin Jonas," he said.

"Oh, bother!" Carolyn's eyes shot fire. "Just as we want to arrange everything."

Jonas Hassingbury, tall and gaunt, eating a lettuce sandwich, strolled in, as cool and self-possessed as the most experienced cotton leader in town. He was perfectly sure of himself; without wealth, or power or social training, he was blessed with an egotism that a king might have envied. Jonas had never been embarrassed in his life.

Hall looked at him, for the first time with relief, and rose.

"Miss Dallys," he said, "let me present my cousin, Mr. Hassingbury."

Jonas put the sandwich behind his back, and bowed. Carolyn looked up at him, annoyed.

"Dallys?" Jonas queried, "never heard of that name before, to my knowledge. What be ye, Portuguese?"

With the grace of a veteran, he dropped down beside her on the couch. At any other time Carolyn would have welcomed his quaint charm. But her eyes were now for Hall, and she was anxious. Her answer was vague.

Jonas, however, did not appear to notice it. His work was plain. He had to make himself attractive, and get rid of Hall. He launched forth, therefore, on a description of the town of Branford while Carolyn yawned behind her fan.

At the first pause Hall broke in. "By jove, Carolyn, I've got to get some photographs in my room I promised to show Mr. Doremus! Cousin Jonas will take care of you all right, Carolyn. He's a great man for the ladies!" and with this slid out of range of her protest.

Carolyn pulled herself together to make the best of it. This yoke must be got rid of at once. She leaned toward him with ardor.

"Oh, Mr. Hassingbury, do you really think I'm pretty? You must have known so many beautiful women—in Branford!"

"Yes, that's right!" said Jonas, with unction. "I certainly have, miss. Why, I've buried three wives already! I reckon I know pretty near as much about women as anybody."

Hardly a Drugstore in the Land That Does Not Sell This Remedy

On the Market Half a Century.

When you are in perfect health, and are enjoying a strong and vigorous vitality, it is then that your blood is free from all impurities.

You should be very careful and give heed to the slightest indication of impure blood. A sluggish circulation is often indicated by an impaired appetite, a feeling of lassitude and a general weakening of the system. It is then that you should promptly take a few bottles of S. S. S., the great blood purifier and strengthener. It will cleanse the blood thoroughly and build up and strengthen the whole system. S. S. S. is sold by all druggists. Valuable information about the blood supply can be had free by writing to the Swift Specific Co., 24 Swift Laboratory, Atlanta, Ga.

Dinner Stories

The man stood before the judge. "How many times have you been arrested before?" asked the judge.

"Never before (sir)," answered the prisoner.

"But your face looks so familiar," replied the judge.

"I am the bartender from across the way, sir," said the prisoner.

A Scottish farmer, being elected a school manager, visited the village school and tested the intelligence of the class by his metaphysical questions. His first inquiry was, "Now, boys, can any one of you tell me what naething is?"

After a moment's silence a small boy in a back seat rose and replied, "It's wat ye gied me t'other day for holdin' yer horse!"

A teacher could not get a little girl to remember the number four. She would count "1, 2, 3, 5." Finally in desperation the teacher asked her if she had a cat at home. The little girl said she did.

"Then run along home, and count the cat's feet, then come back and tell me how many she has," said the teacher.

The little girl returned to the school room promptly.

"Well, did you count the feet?" asked the teacher.

"Yes, ma'am."

"How many has it?"

"Two in the front and two in the back."

A rookie was reading an article on the Kaiser which compared him to Nero. "Who was Nero, Bill?" he asked of a fellow-rookie. "Wasn't he a man that was always cold?"

"Naw," was the reply, "that was Zero, another guy altogether."

New Ruling Made. Madison.—That breakfast foods can no longer be used as four substitutes was the ruling of the State Food Administration Saturday. Hereafter breakfast foods could be purchased as substitutes for flour. This is no longer possible. Only flour such as rice, barley, corn, oats, rice, potato, and buckwheat can be sold as substitutes hereafter.

THIS AGED WOMAN

Was Made Strong by a Simple Remedy

The following letter from Mrs. Wells adds another link to the great chain of evidence which proves that there is nothing equal to Vinol to create strength for feeble, weak, run-down nervous conditions.

Malone, N. Y. "I am 54 years of age and get into a feeble, weak and nervous condition so I could not sleep. Vinol has not only built up my strength, but it has given me a good appetite and I sleep all right now." Mrs. S. B. Wells.
